Subject: What are you guys doing!?

You had a tyrant in your grasp and you let him go. I currently use Microsoft products and have for many years, not because I find them better or like them in any way, but because they have such a grip on everything that I can't use the products I like. To use other products would alienate me from the many others who use the same products, most for the same reason I do. It's a vicious cycle that is supported by every effort of Microsoft because they know their products don't really support themselves. Yeah, it's good business practice, for them, but it really sucks for those of us who want to leave their products by the roadside but can't.

The next time you have Microsoft in court, and there will definitely be a next time now, please bring the hammer down on them.
